

SPRAWL

Costs Us All!

A Guide to the Costs of Sprawl and How to Create Livable
Communities in Maryland

Sprawl Costs us All

A Guide to the Costs of Sprawl and How to Create Livable Communities in Maryland

Written By

Janet Pelley, Greg Becker, Larry Bohlen,
Alex Winter, and Brett Hulsey

Acknowledgments

Special thanks to Guy Guzzone, Jim Clarke,
Bonnie Burgess, Sondra Levin, Glen Besa,
Mimi Cooper, and Bonnie Bick for their help
in preparing this report.

Advisory board:

John Lipman, Chesapeake Bay Commission
Karen Lewand, Baltimore Heritage
George Maurer, Chesapeake Bay Foundation
Jack Greer, Maryland Sea Grant
Brett Van Akkeren, U.S. EPA
Nancy Boeckstael, Agricultural and Resource Economics, University of Maryland
Beth Hickey, Maryland Sea Grant

Credits

Photographs: pages 1, 2, 3, 10 and 13 by
Skip Brown, Maryland Sea Grant; page 2,
Chesapeake Bay Foundation. Graph on page
7 adapted from graph by American Farmland
Trust.

Design

Noel Albizo Graphic Design, Columbia Md.

Printing

Heritage Printing and Graphics,
Leonardtown, Md.

Printed on recycled paper.
January, 1997

For more copies, send $5 per copy to:
Sierra Club Foundation
69 Franklin St.
Annapolis, Maryland 21401
410-263-2230

Contents

Executive Summary	1
Introduction	2
The Costs of Sprawl	4
Smart Growth Saves Money While Protecting the Environment	9
Maryland's Growth Management Act: a Toothless Tiger	11
What You Can Do	12
Conclusion	13
Resources	13
Appendix	14
Bibliography	16

Lacey, J and R. Arendt. 1990.
An examination of market appreciation for clustered housing with permanently protected open space. Amherst, MA: Center for Rural Massachusetts.

Larson, Arthur B. and T. A. Vance. 1988.
Fiscal impacts of residential development in Culpeper County, Virginia. Warrenton, Virginia: Piedmont Environmental Council.

Lipton, Eric and Manuel Perez-Rivas. 1996.
Suburbs budgeters sound a red alert as needs rise and revenue falls. The Washington Post. January 7, 1996. pp. A1, A20.

Longman, Phillip. 1994.
Sprawl. Florida Trend. December 1994, pp. 40-47.

Maryland Office of Planning, 1989.
Environmental and economic impacts of lot size and other development standards. Baltimore, MD: Maryland Office of Planning.

Maryland Office of Planning. 1991.
Maryland's Land 1973-1990 a Changing Resource. Baltimore, MD: Maryland Office of Planning.

National Association of Homebuilders (1986). Cost effective site planning -single family development. Washington, DC: National Association of Homebuilders

Noonan, James and Pete McEntee. 1995.
The potential for new residential development in Maryland. Managing Maryland's Growth Issue Papers. Baltimore, MD: Maryland Office of Planning.

Noss, Reed F. and Robert L. Peters. 1995.
Endangered ecosystems: a status report on America's vanishing habitat and wildlife. Washington, DC: Defenders of Wildlife.

Reid, Alice. 1996.
Area traffic stuck in a costly jam: residents' loss of time and fuel is highest in U.S., study says. The Washington Post. December 10, 1996, page A1.

Resource Analytics, Inc. 1994.
Building a sustainable landscape: The benefits and costs of non-regulatory land protection. North Carolina Coastal Land Trust and Coastal Federation.

Schueler, T. 1995.
Site planning for urban stream protection. Washington, DC: Center for Watershed Protection. Metropolitan Washington Council of Governments.

Vance, T. and A. Larson, 1988.
Fiscal impact of major land uses in Culpeper County, Virginia. Warrenton, VA: Piedmont Environmental Council.

Weyerhaeuser Company, 1989.
The value of landscaping. Tacoma, Washington: Weyerhaeuser Nursery Products Division

